Fragment of a parchment document with several large holes and significant staining. The text is written in a medieval script, likely Gothic or Carolingian minuscule, and is mostly illegible due to the damage. Some faint words like "et", "in", and "de" are visible.

Fragment of a parchment document, similar to the one on the left, with a large vertical tear and several smaller holes. The text is also in a medieval script and is largely illegible. Some words like "et", "in", and "de" are visible.

[Faint, illegible handwritten text in two columns, likely a historical document or manuscript.]
